It's been a lot of fun for a long time — until about a year ago. Suddenly, without any warning, our marriage took a turn. My husband only calls me about two times a week. And since I'm in the business, we're required to be spending quite a bit of time together when we are both in the same city. He's more than willing to spend time with me when I'm at work. But as soon as I leave the office, he keeps canceling plans. When I ask him why he's canceled everything, he becomes very defensive and gives no reason. What's going on here? It's getting to be very hard on me, and my answer to his excuses is to distance myself. It's not true that he's becoming distant; he just has "other things" going on. It's very painful to watch our relationship turn from comfortable to very uncomfortable. — KATHY IN CALIFORNIA DEAR KATHY: Your husband sounds like a genuinely decent guy. He is, after all, paying the bills around here, so he should be able to spend time with you. You're right that it's very painful when a relationship comes to a standstill, but you shouldn't give up on it. Here are a few questions you might ask your husband: Is your business still important to you? If your husband is spending a lot of time away from home, then his business may just take over your life, and that is not a good thing. Is work making you unhappy? If your husband's work life is causing him to be unhappy, it may be in your and your husband's best interest to consider combining your careers. Do you have any friends that you can tell about this? If he is this distant with you, but doesn't seem to be distant with anyone else in his life, he may be depressed. It is definitely a sign that you need to get the help he is not getting.
